Abstract: This paper refers to the stages of the bureaucracy development as a form of government and public administration system. From Max Weber's phrase, "bureaucracy is the ideal type of institutional organization towards which the modern society aspires" today, the concept has received pejorative directions which concludes that the public administration should have as main characteristic or purpose, creating new jobs and not the public interest served. Assuming that efficiency is the ultimate goal of any institution and effectiveness as the ratio of the achieved objective and the result to achieve, we will manage to influence productivity in the public sector.
