Abstract: The study mainly aimed to analyse the structure and the dynamics of the structure of the national economy between 2009-2016. Using the data on the structure and dynamics of professional traders available from the Trade Registry, we made a structural profile of national economy activities. The study shows that most professional traders in the studied period opted for a specific type of legal form and industry. These options denote that there are deficiencies in the architecture of the economic system that may be viewed both as the effects of previous contexts and causes for unfavourable future evolutions. The analysis also shows that the pace of company removals surpassed the new registrations of traders representing an alarming aspect in what regards the economic activities in Romania.
