Abstract: A result of crises – of any type – is the occurrence in the field of economy of imbalances and conflicting states, mainly due to the vulnerability of the financial system. It's true that centuries before or even 70-80 years ago, crises (be them financial or not) were considered grave, yet that kind of gravity is, at the present time, much more roughly defined. Even if its valencies are intensified by the turbulent age we undergo, the current crisis does not bring absolutely new elements; it is, however, impregnated with a much more speculative atmosphere than the previous ones. The consequences of that is the appearance of speculative movements, uncertainty, monetary-financial „territories” which imply running unpredicted, endogenetic and exogenetic risks.

Keywords: crises, economic crises, negative consequences of crises
