Abstract: Competitiveness and efficiency of the organization, the quality of its products or services, its position in the marketplace, etc. are determined by both the quality of the tools and technologies applied and the methods and techniques used, or in other words by how the new discoveries of science and information technology are learned and put in practice. Given the rapid pace of making innovations in all areas of contemporary society, organizations must find a solution to adapt and one of the safest ways is the investment in human resources.
